Mrs. Smith, whose maiden name was Airs, Smith, whose maiden name was Judd, testified that she was married to Smith April 6, 1911, in New London, and that they lived together exactly four months when they separated. She said that her husband had admitted to her a year ago last December that he had wived with a woman in New London by whom he had had a helid. At that time she had visited the home occupied by her husband and woman and the tenement contained only one bed room and one bed. Her testimony was corroborated bed. Her testimony was corroborated by her mother.

Judge Bennett ruled that it was not in his power to grant a divorce on the admission of the petitioner's husband of his relations with the other woman.
